WASHINGTON — Congressio ful leaders from both major politi-cal parties have warned that rising public alarm over jobs lost to im-ports could cause Congress to defy President Ronald Reagan's veto threat and adopt restrictive trade legislation this fall.

"There's going to be some kind of trade-bill," said Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., the speaker of the Hense of Representatives, at a news conference Wednesday as the House returned from its summer

Generic Valium to Cost Less in U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Food and Drug Administration approved licenses Wednesday for three drug companies to market generic versions of the tranquilizer Valium, which will cut its price.

The production of diszepam, the generic name, will end a 22 year market monopoly by Hoffman-La Roche Inc., whose patent on Valum expired this year.

The licenses were announced by Margaret M. Heckler, secretary of health and human services, who dismissed suggestions that lower prices might spur abuse of the drug. In 1975, its peak year, doctors wrote about 61 million Valum prescriptions, making it the most-prescribed medicine. in the United States.

U.S. Planes Will Fight Paper Battle For Contract

WASHINGTON - The Pentagon has ordered the air force to arrange a one-time "paper compe-tition" between Northrop's F-20 Tigershark and the General Dynamics F-16 Falcon for a role in defending the United States against bomber attack, Pentagon officials said Wednesday.

Pentagon officials and industry sources said the contest would be on paper rather than an actual fly-off because Northrop did not have enough F-20s to stage an aerial competition. The company has made three prototypes, two of which were destroyed in crashes.

The decision guarantees Nor-throp a long-awaited chance to introduce its new fighter plane into the U.S. military inventory, with the prospect of a substantial export market if it succeeds.

But the competition falls far short of what Northrop had been seeking, which was a running competition with General Dynamics for a variety of air force roles, with both companies guaranteed part of

State Department officials said they expected the arms sales package to go to Congress for approval in the next week or so. They said they doubted, however, that any aircraft would be included because of opposition in Congress.

The study concluded that Israel's military power was so great that it would not be endangered by the arms sales. It also said that while sales to Jordan and Saudi Arabia could not guarantee those countries' support for U.S. policies, failure to provide the arms could damage U.S. interests in the region.

"Our willingness to meet Saudi or other Arab requests for arms strengthens the perception of balance in our approach to the peace process and our standing as a reliable friend," the study said.

"At the same time," it said, "Sau-di confidence in their ability to protect themselves from external threats or pressure is essential to greater flexibility and support for the peace process." The Saudis are concerned that hey may be dragged into the five-year war between Iran and Iraq, State Department officials said, particularly by an attack from Iran. The study added that any large-scale U.S. military operation in the

The report devoted considerable attention to Jordan because of the diplomatic initiative launched by King Hussein. The Jordanian lead-er has offered a plan for peace talks with Israel under the umbrella of an international conference, but disagreements on procedure appear to have stalled the effort.
The review said that Jordan's stability was "very important" to U.S. interests in the Middle East and that military aid would bolster the country's willingness to "participate in the peace process."

It cautioned, however, that U.S. military aid "cannot guarantee that participation or determine its mode or timing." Resolutions have been introduced in Congress to bar advanced military sales to Jordan until it agrees to direct peace talks with Israel. The administration has opposed the resolutions.

The report asserted that previous U.S. efforts to withhold arms to Jordan or to link sales to participation in peace negotiations "have weakened our leverage" and led Jordan to turn to other suppliers, including the Soviet Union.

"Jordan plays a pivotal role in containing Soviet power and influence, in providing U.S. strategic and political access to the region, and in its growing support for U.S. military imitiatives such as exercises and pre-positioning," the study said.

"I think we're going to see a gradual increase by heterosexual spread but by no means as rampant in society as we now have it in homosexual men," said Dr. Antho-ny Fauci, head of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious

But for the groups at highest risk, "it is already as serious and devastating a scourge as I can name in memory," he says. "You couldn't design a virus more diabolical than his one," Dr. Fauci said. "It knocks off the very cells that are supposed to protect you from it."

Margaret Heckler, secretary of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, says: "I consider it a terrible threat. It's a staggering problem for society." She has called AIDS the No. 1 U.S. publichealth problem.

Before inroads against AIDS can be made, medical researchers must learn much more about the nature, behavior and cause of acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Scientists are unsure of the origin of the AIDS virus, how it works, why it targets the white blood cells, known as T4 lymphocytes, that are the one indispensable element of the body's immune system. Ulti-finately, a victim of AIDS is left vulnerable to an array of lifethreatening infections and cancers.

Further complicating the search are recent findings that AIDS may sometimes show itself first as a disease attacking the brain and nervous system, perhaps even damag-ing the brains of unborn babies who become infected. The virus has now been found in brain cells.

New molecular probes have also found it in the epithelial cells that line the eyes and eyelids. Some fear the virus, known primarily for its highly targeted attack on the immune system, may eventually play a role in other diseases as well.

Much of the current concern focuses on heterosexual transmission in the United States, but researchers caution that it may take several years for a clear trend to emerge. A key link may be prostitutes, who are often drug abusers and therefore at risk for AIDS.

A study by Dr. Charles Rabkin of the New York City Health Department found that 3 percent of neterosexual men going to a venereal-disease clinic were infected with the AIDS virus. These people resumably were very active sexually in a city where AIDS is rela-

This may not sound high, but it is close to the level found among homosexual men in San Francisco in blood samples taken in 1978; this was at an early stage of the AIDS epidemic, before the disease had been formally identified.

The virus may spread next to other sexually active populations, such as college students, perhaps infecting, as a researcher put it, "the Ivy League college girl whose boylinend has had sex with a prostitute two years earlier." The first cases of AIDS were recognized in the spring of 1981 among homosexual men in Los Angeles. Soon, doctors began asking whether AIDS was a new disease or one that had existed all along in another form or another place. Only recently, however, have pieces of an answer begun to fit together.

The most popular hypothesis
now is that AIDS is indeed a fairly new disease, and that the AIDS virus originated during the 1960s in central Africa as an evolutionary descendant of a monkey virus.

Belgian scientists have found many cases of AIDS among the people of Zaire and nearby Rwanda and Burundi, as well as in Ugan- any time from now on. We have to

Tests of its molecular structure show that it differs only slightly from the AIDS virus, named HTLV-3 by Dr. Gallo of the Na-tional Cancer Institute and LAV by French researchers.

It is not known whether the virus makes these African monkeys sick, but the same virus has been found in several species of monkeys in primate research colonies in the cans may put them at much lower United States, sometimes causing an AIDS-like disease. It is thought the mutation may have happened during the 1960s because frozen blood specimens taken from Zaireans around 1970 indicated exposure to AIDS. Similar samples from around 1960 show no evidence of AIDS.

Whenever the AIDS virus arose, it has clearly been spreading in Africa longer than in the United States. The virus appears to have infected a far larger percentage of Africans than Americans. Reports from Zaire suggest it is transmitted primarily through heterosexual contact among people who have

While the first cases were not recognized until 1981, doctors have and researchers are waiting to see since traced cases back to 1978, mainly in New York City. The roughly 200 cases reported in 1981 had mushroomed to 12,736 cases while the AIDS virus does not last month.

Epidemiologists tracking AIDS found that while it spread more slowly than the fearsome plagues of the past, it is much more deadly. Bubonic plague and cholera killed about half their untreated victims, smallpox as many as 40 percent. The death rate for all U.S. AIDS

One potential problem is the fact that the AIDS virus exists in many slightly different forms, the result of minor mutations that altered the cases to date is 50 percent -- 6,376 deaths. But the disease takes years precise molecular structure of the to kill its victims. Among those virus's protein coat. BEIJING — When Richard M. Nixon visited a Chinese college campus this week it was reminiscent of his best moments on the U.S. presidential campaign trail, with people mobbing him with requests for autographs or a touch of the hand.

The former president, beaming, had to wait while accompanying Chinese officials cleared a path for him out of an auditorium where he had addressed several hundred students and

"Thank you, thank you, thank you very much," he said as he disappeared inside a Red Flag limousine of the kind commonly used by China's senior leaders. Mr. Nixon, 72, is on his fourth visit here as a private citizen, but it is for his first visit, as president in 1972, that he is appreciated by Chinese. The visit ended more than two decades of estrangement between China and the United States and launched a relationship that has been carefully fostered by both sides.

Chinese leaders always have been puzzled by the Watergate affair, the scandal that ultimately forced Mr. Nixon to resign the presidency in 1974. Although the Communist period in power in China is rife with exam-ples of leaders who have been purged or assigned to menial tasks, the errors for which they have been stripped of power almost invariably have been political, not legal or

Besides, the Chinese tradition places a high premium on loyalty to old friends, and Chinese officials have made clear that no foreigner ranks higher than Mr. Nixon in this regard.

Before his speech at the University of In-ternational Business and Economics on Wednesday, there was an ovation when Shi Weisan; vice president of the university, described Mr. Nixon as "an old friend of China" and as a man with "the boldness of vision

The former president, who is on a 25-day tour of 10 nations, mainly in Asia, has received courtestes reserved for China's most privileged guests since arriving in Beijing from Tokyo on Tuesday. He was met at the airport by Zini Qizhen, a deputy foreign min-ister, and is staying at the Diacyutai state gnesthouse, where he and Henry A. Kissinger negotiated the Shanghai Communique with Zhou Enlai in 1972.

The official Chinese news agency, Xinhua, reporting on a hanquet given for Mr. Nixon by the foreign minister, Wu Xueqian, took the unusual step of saying that he was expected to meet with China's top three leaders, Deng Xisoping, Hu Yaobang and Zhao Ziyang, Such meetings almost never are an-nounced beforehand, and it is generally only serving heads of state and government leaders who meet all three men.

In all his visits as a private citizen the former president has been entertained in China, but the affection for him has not been so plainly on display previously. In part, this appears to reflect a Chinese judgment that Mr. Nixon has regained some of his standing with the American public, and can thus be honored without risk of offending opinion in

Also, the political relaxation fostered by

Mr. Deng's policies has made possible things that would have been frowned on only three years ago, when Mr. Nixon was last in China. The scene in the college auditorium was characteristic of this. Only recently would Chinase students have desaid to make a vicinia. nese students have dared to mob a visiting dignitary and thrust forward copies of his books, as they did Wednesday.

In his speech, Mr. Nixon traced the strides that China and the United States have made in their relations since 1972, and struck themes that seemed to go down well with high-ranking Chinese who attended.

Instead of applauding Mr. Deng's adoption of capitalist economic techniques, a posture common enough among recent visitors to discomfort many Chinese officials, Mr. Nixon adopted a more allusive approach.

"It is not for me, or for others in America, to tell China what its economic system should be," he said. "What the people of China want will not be in all respects the same as what the people of the United States would want. But in some respects it will be the same. The bottom line test of any economic system, as you know better than I, is whether it works."

He answered questions from the students and won his strongest applause with a reference to a remark that he said had been made about China by Napoleon.

Mr. Nixon said: "He said, 'China, there's a sleeping giant, don't awaken her because when you do she will move the world.' Well, China is awake today, China is alive, and with the help of your generation China will move the world in the paths of peace and progress for all people."

Now we're destroying their principal habitat at the rate of 50 acres every minute.

We live on this planet by courtesy of the earth's green cover. Plants protect fragile soils from erosion, regulate the atmosphere, maintain water supplies for agriculture and prevent formation of deserts. Without plants man could not survive.

Yet, knowing this, we are destroying our own life-support system at such an alarming rate that it has already become a crisis – a crisis for ourselves and an even bigger one for our children. The figures alone should tell the story - we destroy a tropical rain forest three times the size of Switzerland every year; within 25 years only fragments of the vast Malaysian and Indonesian forests

Dr. Richard Evans Schultes, director of the Botanical Museum at Harvard University, has spent 13 years in the Amazon jungle collecting the magic' plants of myth and legend and making them available to Western medicine and science. "The drugs of the future," he says, grow in the primeval jungle."

What we are destroying

Much of the food, medicines and materials we use every day of our lives is derived from the wild species which grow in the tropics. Yet only a tiny fraction of the world's flowering plants have been studied for possible use. Hornifyingly, some 25,000 of all flowering species are on the verge of

Once the plants go, they are gone forever. Once the forests go only wastelands remain.

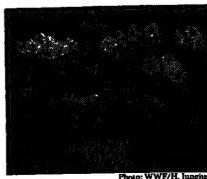

Catharanthus roseus. Many of the world's children who have suffered from leukaemia are now alive due to the properties discovered in the rosy perisoinkle, which originated in Madagascar where 90% of the forests are tready destroyed.

Who is the villain?

There is no villain - except ignorance and short-sightedness. The desperately poor people who live in the forests have to clear areas for crops and fuel, but they are doing this in such a way that they are destroying their very livelihood.

Add to this the way in which the heart is being ripped out of the forests to meet the demand for tropical timbers and we have a recipe for rse-resistant potatoes, obtained by crosseding wild potatoes from the Andes with domestic varieties, ensure that Ireland will never again experience the blight disease which wiped out its entire crop, leaving a million people to die of starvation.

What can be done about it? The problem seems so vast that there is a tendency to shrug and say "What can I do?" But there is an answer. There is something that each and every one of us can do.

Obsessed With the Deficit

U.S. economy is adjusting to it, the suggestion goes, and things are running smoothly, so set aside your petty obsession with government bookkeeping and try to enjoy prosperity like everyone else. For 40 years, according to one view, the deficit has been an indispensable stabilizer for the economy; it is an old friend.

It is true that inflation rates came down while the deficit went up in the years 1980-82. There were two recessions in that period, of which the second pushed unemployment to its highest postwar level. We have argued that if the nation had gone into those recessions with lower deficits, it would have come through them with lower interest rates and less pain. It is also true that interest rates can sometimes fall while the deficit rises. That happened most spectacularly in the summer and fall of 1982, and the reason was, once again, that the recession was approaching its trough. The rising deficit, in classic fashion, then pulled the economy into a rapid recovery. But now, nearly three years into that recovery, the budget deficit is as large as ever. That helps explain why long-term interest rates are still over 10 percent a year, at a time when inflation

You can already hear the question: Why worry so much about the budget deficit? The interest rates would be lower. But American interest rates would be lower. But American interest rates have to remain high enough to draw in foreign money to finance current bor-rowing, both public and private. Americans do not save enough to finance it themselves.

There are three good reasons to keep worrying about the delicit. First: Interest on the ing about the deficit. First: Interest on the federal debt is taking a large, rapidly increasing share of the budget, pre-empting public resources far better spent on public services. Second: It is burdening the country with a large foreign debt. Paying interest on it will adversely affect American living standards. Third: If the country goes into the next recession with a big deficit, it cannot risk letting the deficit expend in the normal feshion.

letting the deficit expand in the normal fashion to generate a recovery. The United States went into the 1980-82 recessions with a deficit less than 2 percent of gross national product, and came out with a deficit over 6 percent. If it goes into the next one with the deficit at 6 percent of GNP, would any president dare let it swell to 10 percent? That threatens uncontrollable inflation. But not to let it expand would mean enduring a recession far worse than the one in 1982. Not to worry, you say?

Offshore Oil: Take the Risk

Occasionally someone accuses the U.S. Interior Department of selling out to special interests; but this time, the charges are especially intriguing. The "special interests" now are environmental groups, and the cries of sellout come from the energy industry, angered by Secretary Donald Hodel's tentative decision to close most of California's offshore waters to oil exploration for the rest of the century.

Mr. Hodel's apparent motive is honorable. He wants to negotiate an end to the long, bitter dispute over the disposition of some of America's richest potential oil reserves. But a look at his proposed agreement suggests that both the industry and the public have reason to object.

Most of the oil yet to be discovered in the lower 48 states probably lies under the shallow waters of the outer continental shelf, and much of that is off the California coast. But since the big oil spill in the Santa Barbara channel in 1969, residents along this magnificent coastline have lobbied effectively against develop-ment. The deal that Mr. Hodel negotiated with environmental groups and their friends in Congress would open 150 tracts for leasing. But barring a national emergency, the remaining 98 percent of offshore oil properties would be closed to exploration until the year 2000. His willingness to give ground is understandable. For four years the House, by a slim majority, has blocked all development, and prospects for overriding House opposition are poor. So any concession from environmentalists could be interpreted as a victory for development. But the oil companies disagree. They argue that the tracts to be opened probably contain only a tiny fraction of the 5 billion to 10 billion barrels potentially recoverable. They want the secretary to negotiate a more favor-able deal. If he cannot, they would prefer to take their chances with the next Congress.

Which policy best serves the public? There is a strong case for accelerated development. Oil is now in glut worldwide, but within a decade the market will almost certainly tighten. Un-less more oil is found to replace diminishing domestic reserves, imports are likely to grow from about a third of consumption to a half by the end of the century. Without California's offshore petroleum, the search will be far more costly — or fruitless.

There is always some risk of a major oil spill.

But that risk should be taken in perspective. Regulation was tightened after the Santa Barbara accident; the record of drillers in American waters has been excellent since. In fact, acquiring more offshore oil probably reduces environmental risks; oil that is piped from offshore wells is less likely to spill and poliute beaches than is oil imported by tanker.

One price of a high living standard is potential risk to the environment. Often that risk is not worth bearing — but it is in this case. Secretary Hodel is holding public hearings on the offshore drilling and plans to make a final decision this month. He should hold out for more rapid development.

Other Opinion

For a Self-Policing Press

At the core of recent signs of public hostility to the press is the feeling that it gets away with being arrogant, cruel, biased and contemptuous of everyone's privacy but its own because it never has to suffer for its sins, except in libel them. Otherwise, many people seem to feel, while newspapers and television gleefully expose all kinds of wrongdoing by public offi-cials, hardly anyone continually exposes journalistic malpractice.

If, however, newspapers and broadcast stations were seriously to regard the failures of the press as a vital part of the news, investigatory press criticism could finally flourish in the land. The current low credibility of the press would rise because readers and viewers would see that the remote, imperious Fourth Estate is not immune from accountability. And the accuracy of the press would improve: No journalist wants to be publicly humiliated for playing a story like a bush leaguer.

Don't Circumvent GATT

While rejecting quotas on shoe imports, President Reagan also announced an initiative to use the powers of his office to go in hot pursuit of unfair trading practices by other nations. He will invoke Section 301 of the 1974 Trade Act to bring, on behalf of the government, complaints against practices deemed unfair by trading partners of the United States.

That section of the law had been the province for industries to bring grievances against other nations. The government of the United States then adjudicated the controversy. The new proposal would convert the executive into both prosecutor and judge. There is room for aggressive trade advocacy on the part of the U.S. government. Such a posture would reassure congressmen trying to respond sympathetically to constituents heavibattered by imports and struggling to break into tight export markets. But the better route for that advocacy is the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade — however glacial its response, however slothful the role of allies. - The Los Angeles Times.

Moscow Looks to Siberia

A recent Politburo decision to pour more resources into West Siberia is closely connected with the Soviet need to earn foreign currency for grain imports. As the dismal performance of Soviet agriculture shows, capital investment is not enough. Because of Siberia's climate and lack of communications. Soviet specialists calculate that it costs three times more to raise output by one ton and transport it to the consumer than it would to save a ton through economies. But it is not easy to make Soviet workers economize state property. - The Times (London).

Pulling the Plug on the Rand

Last month's failure by President Pieter Botha to deliver even minimalist reforms that would have assuaged white business criticism has led to the plug being pulled on the rand by investors around the world. Until Mr. Botha starts to enfranchise the black community in his country, South Africa is likely to remain something of a financial leper.

Palace intrigues are apparently exercising a powerful influence, and Yan Shih Kai's prospects are declining owing to the obstruction of the Empress Dowager's party, which is striving for mastery. The scheme now in the forefront provides for the Empress Dowager supplanting the Regent as nominal head, while a council of three, consisting of two princes and a Manchu Minister, would direct affairs. The New Summitry: A Path for Reagan

WASHINGTON — In the new summitry, the media are the sherpas. Having foolishly begged for a meeting with the new Soviet leader, Ronald Reagan has been rocked back on his beels by the Gorbachevian response; a beautifully orchestrated barrage of publicity aimed at raising hopes for a dramatic American concession.

Americans are now saying to the dramatic American concession.

Americans are now saying to the world, "Don't expect much," while the Russians say, "Expect plenty—and if nothing comes of the meeting, it's all the Americans' fault."

How should the president adapt to the new summitty? He should recognize that the drum beating in the footbills means his long-sought. the foothills means his long-sought summit meeting has already begun.

And he should make these points:

1. "Star wars" is already a brilliant success because it has induced the Russians to talk of arms reductions. The American deriders of the feasibility of a space-based missile defense were shown to be mistaken when the Russians treated it as a real threat to their long reach for superiority. Senator Robert Byrd, the West Virginia Democrat, re-ports from Moscow that Mikhail Gorbachev is prepared to "put for-ward the most radical proposals on strategic arms," but not until Mr. Reagan agrees "to prohibit the mili-

The Russians, of course, do not really expect the Americans to abandon the one idea that has brought them back to the table in return for a pig in a poke. In the early 1970s, the United States gave up anti-ballistic missile defense in the hope of limiting offensive buildups, but that did not work; it surely will not be duped that way again.

WASHINGTON — In the new summitry, the media are the sherpas. Having foolishly begged for a meeting with the new Soviet

Mr. Reagan should point out publicly that any new limit on a defense shield must be accompanied by serious reductions in existing warheads.

No package, no deal, Nor should America buy the Soviet "arms race in space" rhetoric; space is "militarized" by an inter-continental ballistic missile travelcontinental ballistic missile traveling through it, not by a shield to stop that missile. A nation that already has deployed a system to kill satellites can hardly complain, as
Mr. Gorbachev does, of a "secondgeneration" anti-satellite system.

2. Why do the Russians insist on warhead superiority? They have 7,900, the United States has 7,500;
U.S. delegates have proposed in Ge-

U.S. delegates have proposed in Geneva that both sides cut down to 5,000. That is a constructive proposal, but the Russians refuse to give up their edge; instead they talk of limiting launchers, as if launchers kill people, and doubling the number of warheads in each launcher. How many people know that it is Mr. Gorbachev, not Mr. Reagan, who blocks cuts in warheads?
3. The United States is prepared to call the Soviet leader's bluff on verification."We are interested in reliable verification of any agreement as much as they are," Mr. Gorbachev told the editors of Time magazine, Great But satellites cannot verify everything: Mr. Reagan should start pressing now, publicly, for on-site inspection, which the Russians cannot reasonably refuse if they are "serious" - their favorite word - about arms control. How many people know that Mr. Gorbachev turned down an invitation to view a U.S. test for fear of setting a precedent that might apply to one of his tests?

4. Do not let the Russians limit 4. Do not let the Russians limit the agenda to backing America off on missile defenses; linkage lives. Neither the junketing senators nor Time's editors apparently troubled Mr. Gorbachev with questions about his crackdown on dissidents in Gorki, his pouring of arms into Syria and Libya and other sponsors of terrorism, his Central American ventures or his new slaughter in ventures or his new slaughter in Afghanistan. If he gets testy about those subjects, so be it. 5. Pick up on his hints at openings rather than wait until formal pro-posals are made. Moscow's official position at Geneva (forbidding all basic research into space defense) has been silly - both sides will continue such research and both sides know it. Mr. Gorbachev has now acknowledged this, which calls for a response from Mr. Reagan, who should not be the one standing on ceremony. An American propos-al to share a certain type of defense research is one possibility.

Similarly, General Edward L.

Rowny's ears perked up at the unex-pected Russian use of the word zaradyi — "explosive charge" — which could indicate a willingness to discuss warhead reduction. The next Gorbachev interviewer should try probing there.

If there is to be a superpower agreement, its outline is no secret: verifiable warhead parity and non-aggressive Soviet behavior in return for a limit on testing space defenses. Unlikely, but a good deal all around; if it comes about, hats will be off to the new summitry.

Time for America to Talk With Black South Africa

SAN FRANCISCO - Except for the white right in South Africa, By Michael Calabrese

everyone seems to recognize that political power-sharing if not outright majority rule, is inevitable. What is not inevitable is an American policy of diplomatic segregation that puts the United States in the unenviable position of being on both the wrong side, and the losing side, of South Africa's incipient civil war.

If President Reagan is really interested in "constructive engagement," then he should integrate his policy by constructively engaging South Afri-ca's credible leaders, black and white. Recent initiatives by the State Department offer at least a glimmer of foresight and flexibility. Last Friday the administration called on Pretoria to include the outlawed African National Congress in any future negotiations and to release the rebel group's jailed leader, Nelson Mandela. Earlier this summer the administration approached third parties about the possibility of opening that with the African National Congress, according to Johnny Makatini, ANC director of international affairs. Mr. Makatini said during an inter-

It will undoubtedly hasten their release, however, if the United States opens talks with the ANC and with leading dergymen Drawing Battle Plans for the Next Famine such as Bishop Tutu.

In his last speech before he was entenced to life in prison in 1964, Mr. Mandela expressed his admiration for Western political institutions. He noted, however, that "for many decades Communists were the only political group prepared to work with the Africans for the attainment of political rights and a stake in society. Because of this there are many Africans who, today, tend to equate freedom with communism."

Mr. Mandela rejected that equation, but a growing number of frustrated young blacks do not. More moderate black leaders want to build a multiracial South Africa combining the best principles of Western demo-eratic rights and Eastern distributional justice. They should be treated as equals, not ignored. The writer, an attorney in San Fran-

An Island Of Change In China?

X IAMEN, China — Yves Binet is a boat-builder who could have stepped out of a French film: 28 years old, with a luxuriant mustache and a large straw hat. He used to build boats in Taiwan. Now he makes luxury yachts in the People's Republic of China, 48-foot fiberglass sloops and ketches that sell in the United construction is everywhere.

The deputy mayor, Jiang Ping, explains that Xiamen decided to improve its infrastructure first in order to appeal to foreign investors. It built an airport, a new railroad station, a deep-water port. It has a computerized telephone system that allows direct dialing to other countries: not exactly the usual thing in China.

The city has also started its own airline, because it was not satisfied with the national airline's service to Hong Kong and elsewhere. It has bought two Boeing 737s; pilots and cabin crew are now training in the United States, and flights are due to start in November. Foreign investors in the special

I asked at one Zulo-language newspaper, found that 50 percent of the blacks in Kwa-Zulu homeland consider Mr. Man-dela their political leader. Chief Xoceco occupies five brand-new buildings, 700,000 square feet (65,000 square meters) altogether, in what Americans would call an industrial park. It started production early this year and is now up to a daily level of 1,000 television sets and 3,000 radiocassette players of all sizes. It will pay no taxes for five years.

Young women wearing white gloves work on the assembly line. And yes, they were not assigned but recruited, as they graduated from high school or in some cases junior high; they applied for jobs and took a written exam. The 7,000 workers punch in and out on a time clock, and they get a bonus if they are on time every day for a month. The time clock is something new in China.

At the Celestial Yacht Co., Mr. Binet said organizing the work force had been a delicate business — and some foreign technicians who lacked the needed patience had gone home. But now workers were willing to accept new ideas, he said. The yard was turning out three yachts a month and starting to make money. "I can tell you it's easier to build boats here than in Taiwan," he said. Over there they have duty and regulations — once they wouldn't let us install a radio. Here they let you bring anything in. It's much easier to deal with the authorities." In other special economic zones there have been reports of corruption and waste. Perhaps Xiamen will avoid the worst. It has a long history of international trade; the tea for the Boston Tea Party came from this harbor. It has a noted university, and a musical tradition. The skeptics have reason for wondering whether China can really change, but in this beautiful place there is a feeling of hope. The New York Times

Ballet Partnerships: Why the Famous Pairings Are Not Being Replaced

HOREOGRAPHY, Maurice Bejart once mused, "like love, is done in pairs." The bravura of a solo, the uniformity of a corps de ballet,

The annals of ballet are filled with such nstrous couplings: Karsavina and Nijinsky, Pavlova and Mordkin, Markova and Dolin, Alonso and Youskevitch, Danilova and Franklin and more recently, Fonteyn and Nureyev, Fracci and Bruhn, Sibley and Dowell, Farrell and Martins — all have triumphed over the challenges of partnering and left indelible impressions of its potential. Each has danced with many others, but together they possess an overwhelming symmetry. "A true partnership," says Antoinette Sibley of ballet mathematics, "is like the work of three stars." Today, however, the ranks of the major ballet companies boast no apparent heirs to these celebrated parmerships. The tradition seems to have been usurped by practicality and by the ever evolving needs of dancers and companies. In its spring season at the Metropolitan Opera House, American Ballet Theater introduced its new production of Kenneth MacMillan's "Romeo and Juliet" to New York with seven different pairs of dancers in the title roles in various performances. And in its return to the Met for two weeks, the company is presenting four pairs in the five scheduled "Romeo and Juliet" performances. This hardly suggests that one partnership is seen as exceeding all others in star quality or box-office appeal.

Indeed, under Mikhail Baryshnikov's artistic direction, ABT has eschewed the trappings of a star system and given increasingly more focus to its young dancers — no doubt in an effort to maintain a continuity of succession. Robert La Fosse, an ABT principal dancer who has benefited from Baryshnikov's grooming, says flatly:

"The dance world has changed. Today, the stars are the chorcographers. I think people are coming to see the ballets, they're not coming to see a particular dancer. It's the ballet that counts. Companies have broken with the tradition of partnerships. Our repo tory is so diverse, and dancers who are matched in one ballet may not look good together in another. You can't run around doing the same roles just because your partner isn't suited for a particular work. I wouldn't want to dance every ballet with the same person. That kind of partnership would become stale."

N any case, Baryshnikov fears the loss of individuality that comes when two dancers fuse their talents. "One always tries to put two people together who look good together and who have an affinity that is interesting or a dissimilarity that is provocative," he says. "But from a practical point of view, it is not necessarily the best idea to keep two dancers together all the time. They become dependent on each other and sometimes the public becomes depen-dent on a partnership rather than on the individual gifts of each dancer."

Rudolf Nureyev, whose liaison with Margot Fonteyn in the 1960s is almost legendary, believes dancers today want to be free to move around from partner to partner and repertory to repertory. "If you are known as a couple," he says, "by yourself you can't do anything. Dancing with Margot Fonteyn was a great moment in my life — it was a celebration when we danced together, like a birthday. But this parmership kept me from participaing in different repertories, different companies and styles of dance. In order to enlarge your career, you have to sacrifice something. I had to go my own way. I knew Carla Fracci and Erik Bruhn.

with Margot Fonteyn."
Now artistic director of the Paris Opera Ballet, and still a sought-after guest artist, Nureyev says: "There is something impeding and cumbersome in running a company based on parmerships. If dancers want to grow, they have to split up."

Though Erik Bruhn describes his seven-year partnership with Caria Fracci in the 1960s as "a love affair without scars, one consummated on the stage," he admits its exclusivity was somewhat limiting. Though he occasionally partnered Natalia Makarova at American Bailet Theater before his retirement in 1971, Brihn — now director of the National Ballet of Canada — acknowledges: Carla believed that I belonged to her and not to anyone else. I could have had something special with Natasha but not simultaneously with Carla."

As a principal dancer with the New York City Ballet — where despite the success of such pairings as Patricia McBride and Edward Villella and Suzanne Farrell and Peter Martins, partnerships have never been promoted or advertised -Sean Lavery thinks the regular interchange of partners safe-guards against a singular approach. "Since there are so many good dancers," he says, "we don't need one or two to call our own. I end up dancing with everybody. It's more interesting because each dancer brings out different aspects of your dancing.

For several years, the ABT ballerina Cynthia Gregory voiced her concern about her difficulty in securing a single partner (rising to six feet on pointe, her height posed a special problem). "I worried for years, "Will I ever find the perfect partner?" she says. "But I've danced with every great male dancer of my time and to me that's more exciting than having had one partner." She singles out Fernando Bujones, of late her frequent partner at ABT and one with whom she enjoys considerable popularity in their performances of "Swan Lake" and "Giselle."

Growing Up With Indian Art

by Santha Rama Rau

HEN the nationwide celebra-tion that is the Festival of India arrives in New York City Saturday, it will provide a wider and nore intense exposure to India's cultural history than any but the most privileged Indians could hope for in a lifetime.

The festival offerings in New York, which will continue through 1986, begin with seven programs of dance and song at Alice Tully Hall in Lincoln Center and will include an exhibition at the Metropolitan Museum of Indian art dating from the 14th through the 19th century — sculpture, painting, jewels, wall hangings, and a spectacular 17th-century red-and-gold imperial tent. There will also be concerts of Indian music, with Indian soloists such as the sitarist Ravi Shankar, conducted by Zubin Mehta, at Avery Fisher Hall. The American Museum of Natural History will mount two photographic exhibits, including one on Indian wildlife; the Brooklyn Museum will display 4,000 years of terra cotta art, the Museum of Modern Art will offer 49 classic and contemporary Indian films, the Cooper-Hewitt Museum will exhibit contemporary designs created in cooperation with Indian craftsmen, and the Asia Society will display Kushan sculpture and art from the court of the 16th-century emperor Akbar.

The acquaintance of Indians with their arts - from the terra cotta works to the sculpture to the photography — is a rather oblique matter, not, until very recently, a deliberately engineered cultural experience. To begin with, most Indians do not travel to sightsee. Although tourism is rapidly becoming more popular among Indians, the major incentives for travel remain the demands of work, the visits to relatives - often for such family gatherings as weddings - and, most important, pilgrimages.

The usual introduction to the immense range and diverse manifestations of Indian arts begins in the home. I remember, as a child, hearing through a mist of sleep the hymns that my grandmother sang at sunrise in her prayer room where, before she began the routine of the day, she made offerings of fruit, flowers and incense sticks to the three images of Hindu deities set on the shelf in front of her. Later, I was encouraged to listen in on the lessons that my musically gifted cousin received three times a week from her guru, to increase my understanding of music Since all Indian classical art is religious in origin and devotional in execution, the center for its expression is, understandably, the temple. It was in the casual, jostling, gossipy and deeply serious atmosphere of the temple that one heard fine music, saw splendid sculpture, learned from the chanting of priests and holy men the great heritage of Indian epics. Some of India's best known musicians began their careers playing anonymously in temples and accepting in payment whatever the worshipers gave them.

T HEN I lived in my grandparents' / house in a provincial north Indian town, it never occurred to me — or to my many cousins growing up in that extended family — that we should expect any outside entertainment. None of us had been to a concert, a dance recital or a museum, although we knew people who, for instance, collected Mogul miniatures or Kan-gra paintings and would bring them out for the pleasure of guests in the course of a social evening. We had never been to a theater or even to a movie, which our elders thought a rather raffish sort of pastime. We had no radio, and television had not yet been invented - in any case our house had no electricity or running water. Although we were, by Indian standards, more privileged than most, much of village India, about three-quarters of the nation, still lives largely the same way, without access to the cultural outlets of cities or big towns.

Apart from the games that we children played among ourselves, our chief sources of entertainment were provided by friends and our own family. On some evenings music students from neighboring families would come, with their instruments, to join my consin in giving an informal concert. Our elders would listen critically and appreciatively, commenting on what progress the young people had made. More often, when the children were back from school or college, homework done, household chores accomplished, our grandparents would can still recall the pleasure and excitement we felt when our grandmother summoned us to sit around her in the courtyard on the light rope-webbed beds while she opened her huge dog-eared copy of the Ramayana. Then she would read us stories about the dazzling virtue and courage of King Rama and of his campaign, assisted by the splendid and infi-nitely amusing Lord Hanuman, leader of an army of monkeys, to rescue his queen, Sita, from the demon king of Lanka. In a very Indian tradition, she embroidered the stories with asides and adapted them to appeal to the individual tastes of her grandchildren.

She is comfortable, collected and, at five feet nothing, certainly the shortest director around. Now 32, she attended New York Universi-

But she had won a prize for her first satiric short, "And You Act Like One, Too," which led to grants for two more shorts. Her first feature film. was shown at the Cannes Festival. It had been intended for one of the more modest side events, but the festival's director liked it so much that he insisted it be put into competition. So the official U.S. entries for the 1982 festival were:

"Missing" (director: Costa-Gavras) "Shoot the Moon" (director: Alan Parker) "Hammett" (director: Wim Wenders) "Smithereens" (director: Susan Seidelman)

Yes, she says, of course people said, "Susan who?" Clearly, she is doing something right but she doesn't want to think about it too much. "When I do, I get nervous. I never thought of success before. When you do, you can lose the gut feeling you had before and try to second-guess yourself. I'm trying hard not to think

She was born in Philadelphia, had no interest in film until she was in her 20s and lives in SoHo in New York. Her two feature films have dealt comically with the impact of New York's counterculture on a New Jersey housewife. "New Jersey is a metaphor for Philadelphia," she says. Although she hangs out in the East Village, she does not take sides: In "Desperately Seeking Susan," her anarchic punkish heroine is just as materialistic in her way as her middle-class counterpart. Seidelman works in a comic-ironic vein, with a narrative line so strong that she sometimes ties her amiable offbeat humor into knots.

She doesn't write her own scripts (the character Susan was so named by the screenwriter long before she came on the scene) and she urgently resists attempts to categorize her work as belonging to the youth market.

"Most comedy is geared to 12-year-olds, so you have a lot of throwing-up jokes, she says." "Smithereens' and "Susan" are not youth films. I think my style is young and the look is young, but Smithereens' is a tough film. 'Susan' is a happier film, but they both

What has catapulted "Susan" into the big bucks marketplace is the presence of Madonna in her screen debut. "Madonna is not the star, she's the co-star," Seidelman valiantly argues, but Rosanna Arquette as the New Jersey housewife disappears into the gloaming when faced by the self-styled "boy toy" who makes Bette Midler seem like the Queen Mother and whose clothes have been described as "a wrestling match between knitwear and lingerie, with major damage sustained on both sides."

Seidelman had seen Madonna around while both were hanging out in the East Village. "When I first cast her she was known in New York music circles. She was moving up in the charts but at that point it didn't mean anything because out of the top 50 on the charts, 49 wasn't mobbed, she could still walk down the street and hang out. One month into filming, her album 'Like a Virgin' came out. By the time of the opening in Los Angeles, she had an entourage of three' huge bodyguards. It became quite apparent that this person couldn't go out without causing a major riot. She is unbelievably famous."

Seidelman maintains that Madonna's presence did not alter the balance of the film. "It did alter the press reaction to the film." she says. "Madonna is the Michael Jackson of this year." The operative words are, of course, this year, although Seidelman thinks Madonna may stay the course longer.

"She's funny. She does have an ironical sensitivity, a wonderful Mae West scandalous sense of humor." Before attending film school, Seidelman studied fashion design in-Philadelphia. "I learned that I absolutely hated tailoring and sewing."

Lament for a French Road Sign

by Hans Koning

THEN I conjure up the first time ever I set eyes on the Mediterranean, as a young man in an armysurplus jeep, there is among my images of the shiny sea and green hills the image of a road sign, the town signpost of Cannes. It appeared on the coast road just before that road narrowed at a squat little brick tower, a kind of fortress long since torn

I had seen similar signs before, of course, but that particular one opened my eyes to their beauty. The name "Cannes" itself had a glamorous, poetic glow; it was spelled out in dark blue letters on an off-white, or let us say for this occasion, oyster-white background with a border of a lighter blue, as bright as the sea beside it. I thought that it embodied the very essence of French aesthetics: colors, the typography of the letters, were in harmony and in harmony with their setting. And then I found this to be true for all of them, at every entrance to a French town or village: The blues gave a kind of light and even chic to every surrounding they were in, to rows of trees or houses, to fields, even to gas stations.

These metal rectangles, called panneaux de localisation in the ministerial traffic guidelines, demonstrated a feel for form and color no other nation possessed, and they showed up the reds and blacks in neighboring Belgium and Germany as dreary and aggressive. The Italians used blue too, but their letters and shapes were just that much off). Com-bined with the charm of most French place names they carried, they made virtual works of art. Taking advantage of the statute of limitations, I can confess that when I once came upon one knocked off its post, I stole it. It hung for years in my study and was as much admired as an original painting.

another kind of town sign in a hideous brown. Wherever some authority had decided there was a "sight" for tourists, the brown pointed the way. Such a sign would for instance read, "Antibes. Nos sites, nos restaurants." Now there is this to be said about tourist sights in France: The purely commercial ones, mostly new, manmade monoliths, deserve no such postings or even if they did, it's not the role of any government to point them out; the real ones don't need it. They have been posted by history or by art. Touristy signs extolling them only cheapen them. (European visitors used to smile at the American "Scenic View" posted at spots where you were supposed to stop and snap a picture, and rightly so; now the European adman was catching up with his American

The ugly browns with their cutesy texts were by their very purpose thinly sown. When you drive by, it is possible to blink, close your eyes, and forget them. Not so with the next change, in the works now for three years. This one is more drastic: universal, nationwide. Those fine town and village sign posts in blues and creamy white are being taken down and replaced with new ones, and this change is proceeding apace. The new signs spell out the name of a place in angry black letters, on dead-white, with a red bor-der. Here is a color combination so jarring, it if had appeared at the entrance roads to Barbizon a century ago, it might single-handedly have strangled the blossoming of French 19th-century painting.

There is, at least to me, something basically Central European about them. They are of course in the old kaiserliches Schwarz-Weiss-Rot beloved of Bismarck and those who came on his heels, and it seemed obvious that they must be the product of a Brussels think

The above is past tense. Years ago there first appeared, mostly on the autoroutes, that all town posts in the European Community had to be uniform, and here was their

> OT so. I was doing the EC a gross injustice. This black-white-red is the work of the French Directorate of Road and Traffic Safety, which is housed at 244 Boulevard Saint-Germain in Paris, as close as any address to the heart of French culture. "Studies and experiments," the engineer in charge of Ponts et Chanssees (the department running France's roads since Napoleon) wrote to me, show "that in general the use of black on white, instead of deep blue, presents a better readability . . . the red border improves nighttime readability and safety in general, because the color red can be made retro-reflective (rétroréfléchis-sante) which dark blue cannot."

Thus France is once more being steeped in black-on-white signs, this time with a red danger border, as it was forty-five years ago. A new army of occupation has taken up its positions in the country: an army of technologists, armed with light meters and without so much as a by-your-leave, which doubts our ability to read two-feet high let-ters in blue. Presumably Ponts et Chaussées means well. They just assume that people drive around like half-blind bats, that the lovely roads of France are just tunnels from here to there on which automobilists expedite themselves with one eye on the speed-ometer and one on the asphalt ahead, to be olted out of their stupor only by "retroreflective" attacks on their senses. I can only hope they are wrong there.

careers, both chose partners 20 years their junior: Markova wanted Erik Bruhn and Fonteyn picked Rudolf Nureyev.

As the 22-year-old ABT principal Susan Jaffe notes, however, today's ballerinas have different expectations. "A ballerina today doesn't have the same aura she once did,"

With injuries a perpetual casting concern, companies are often wary of promoting one particular partnership. Kenneth MacMillan, long the Royal Ballet's resident choreographer and ABT's recently named associate artistic director, says he would prefer to pair the same dancers together, but concedes that injuries necessitate flexibility.

One plus one does not necessarily a partnership make, points out Igor Youskevitch, who sees the lack of established partnerships as an artistic, not an administrative concern. Youskevitch, a former leading classic dancer with the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo and Ballet Theater says: "Every pas de deux has a love overtone no matter how diluted or abstract. The younger dancers don't convey this because they don't make any effort to achieve togetherness on stage. They're in competition with one another and concentrate more on their own presentation than on their partner.

Recalling his own historic partnership with Alicia Alonso at Ballet Theater in the 1940s, Youskevitch believes the key to their rapport was their intuitive ability to adapt to each other's spontaneity and to maintain a give-and-take relationship. "On stage, we were equals," he says. On those infrequent occasions when Alonso attempted to upstage him by holding an arabesque too long, Yous-kevitch knew how to re-establish the balance. "I would push her -- not noticeably -but enough so that she'd lose her balance and have to go on to the next step."

Alexandra Danilova calls a partner "a stage husband." Now a teacher at the School of American Ballet, she says, "A new partner is so busy with himself, he can't help you. It's not easy to meet someone who understands you and has the same approach to the art. Understanding is the little thread that connects you. Many times, people dance together who hate each other. This never works."

DEAL partnerships, advises Erik Bruhn, rest partly on the dancers' ability to balance their onstage and offstage relationships. "You must declare your love for each other onstage and then control it. We all believed Gelsey Kirkland and Misha Baryshnikov would become the next great partnership. We had glimpses of it. But their personal conflicts interfered with their proessional life. As Balanchine said, a pas de deux should be a conversation - not a bad

Genuine rapport and ease come from contimuity and repetition, says Fernando Bu-jones, who believes his performance is definitely enhanced when he dances with a favorite partner. "I've had special relationships with many ballerinas, but not one that could be called the particular one of my career. When I dance with Cynthia Gregory, my performances are a little more special Alessandra Ferri, who has just joined ABT after five years with the Royal Ballet, recalls that her frequent pairing with the Royal's Wayne Eagling lent a particular authority to her performance. "Since I trusted him so much I hardly ever got nervous because I trust had some me." knew he'd save me."

Her career still a faint outline, Ferri, 22 confesses her disappointment at her post-poned debut with the injured Baryshnikov, with whom she senses a kinship. "The era of partnerships was almost finished when I joined the Royal Ballet. It's a shame, So many dancers today go on stage and don't even look at their partner."

"I would love to have a partnership," she says wistfully. "Of course if it could be with Misha it would be a dream."

Behind London's Street Names

by Walter Goodman

ONDON — Mincing Lane. Old Jewry. Crutched Friars. Intriguing street names have drawn generations of visitors to the older sections of London, in roughly the same spirit, I imag-ine, that drew Marcel Proust to the place names of his Combray and Balbec.

One drizzly morning, in search of things past and equipped with a "Dictionary of City of Loudon Names," by Al Smith (Arco, 1970), "The Streets of London, 1983) and Christicki (Macmillan, London, 1983) topher Hibbert's "London: The Biography of a City" (Penguin, 1980), I took the Underground east to Aldgate (from either the Sax-on eald meaning old, or ael-gate, open to all), Geoffrey Chancer lived above this oldest gate in the city, but since 1761 there has been no gate there to live above. However, the Aldgate Pump, on the site of a communal well, is a London landmark.

A few steps from Aldgate is Houndsditch, which, according to John Stow's 1598 "Sinvey of London," served as a repository for dead dogs. However, Mrs. Fairfield points out that "every dirch in medieval London must have been similarly abused" and suggests that hunting dogs were kenneled in the vicinity. These days, no dogs roam Houndsditch; its main leatures are a department store and a parking lot. store and a parking lot.

Tourists are drawn down here mainly on Sunday mornings, when the nearby Petricoat Lane market is in full cry. Trade along Petri-coat Lane — its real name is Middlesex Street — is largely in Jewish hands, and sure enough, there, between Houndsditch and the Aldgate Pump stands Jewry Street, formerly known as Poor Jewry Lane to distinguish it from wealthier Jewish neighborhoods. The poor Jews moved in with the permission of Oliver Cromwell in the 17th century. It was quite an occasion, since Jews had been banned from entering the scepter'd isle for the previous 350 years. The earlier immigrants, who first came over from Rouen at the invitation of William the Conqueror after 1066, settled in Old Jewry, the site of a Saxon settlement of Jews, close to where the Bank of England stands today on Thread-

On the ecumenical corner where Crutched Friars (named for a 13th-century convent later dissolved by Henry VIII) joins Jewry Street stands a section of the Roman wall, in an office building called, informatively, the Roman Wall Building. There is no use trying to persuade the building's commissionaire to let you in for a look, however; the most be'll do is direct you to a more accessible section a few streets to the south, near the Tower of Moving westward along Aldgate, the stroller can choose between Leadenhall Street (named for a lead-roofed townhouse built in 1309 and subsequently turned into a market offering the best leather, cloth, pairs and tools) and Fenchurch Street. Leadenhall, now a center of international financial establishments such as the Bank Bumiputva Malaysia Berhad and the Zivnostenská Banka, is a hard looking street, softened only by the St. Katharine Cree Guild Church to Commerce, Industry and Finance where, presumably, the denizens of Cumard House on one side and the brokerage firm of Dean Witter Reynolds on the other receive solace or pay penance for the way they make their church took its name either from the hay once sold there or from a nearby stream that made the ground moor-ish, or fenny. The original Fenchurch Street, says Fairfield, meant "the street past the church on marshy ground." Unable to resist a word like fenny, I embarked on Fenchurch, only to find that it looks today about as much like a moor as Manhattan's Sixth Avenue.

ASSING Northumberland Alley, one comes to Billiter Street, the name of which, Smith writes, is a variation of Belzeterlane, so-called in the early 13th century when belzeters, or bell founders, lived there. He comments, "As there were over 200 churches in the city at this time, the bell founders had plenty to do."

A bit farther on is Mincing Lane, named for the minchins, — not the little folk from "The Wizard of Oz," but the mms who lived on the street in medieval times, Today Mincina I and a disminated by Dignetism House. ing Lane is dominated by Plantation House, a solidly unattractive structure dedicated to trade in coffee, tea, rubber and spices and nostalgia for lost empire.

A left onto Rood Lane (rood, indispensable for makers and workers of crossword puzzles, is Old English for a cross used in crucifition), brings one to Eastcheap. The Anglo-Saxon ceap, to sell or barter, designat-ed, as you might deduce, markets. The market of surpassing interest to its residents today is the stock market.

A right turn along Eastcheap takes us past. Philpot Lane (named for a wealthy grocer who became London's lord mayor in 1378), then Lovat Lane (traced by Fairfield to Love Lane, perhaps a corruption of the medieval Lucas Lane, named for the land's owner. Smith says the street is named for Lord Lovat, the last man beheaded in England; he lost his head in 1747 for his involvement in the feckless 1745 attempt by Bonnie Prince Charlie to capture the throne for the Smart ivings.

The word fen is derived from the Latin church of St. Botolph Billingsgate, which stood there until the Great Fire. St. Botolph that the Great Fire started at 2 A.M. of Sanday, Sept. 2, 1666, in the house of Wilshiam Farryner, the king's baker. If the street is name calls up the inscious aromas of the bakeshop, best disregard Stow's "Survey of London." The 16th-century chronicler reported that the street was commonly called Pudding Lane "because the butchers of Eastcheap have their scalding house for looss there and their puddings [innards], with oth-er filth of beasts, are voided down that way to their dung boats on the Thames." Hastily on then to Fish Street Hill, which one may safely assume had something to do with the purveying of fish, just as nearby Milk Street (where Sir Thomas More was born in 1478) and Poultry had to do with their respective comestibles. Smith is not certain about Wood Street. Although wood was sold in the vicinity, the street may have been named for Sir Thomas Wood, a sheriff of London, who lived there in 1491, or for the wooden houses that were built along the street three commies earlier, in the time of Richard I. Take your pick and knock wood.

I next made an obligatory pause at the Monument, erected in 1670 to commenorate the Great Fire. Its height (202 feet), is said to be the distance from its base to the house where the conflagration began. If you have a weakness for this sort of thing and the strength to include it, you can climb a staircase of 311 steps to get a view of London.

By now the pubs were open, so I went into the Square Rigger, on King William Street, for a half pint of lager, over which I reflected on all those distant lives and livelihoods evoked by the names that ding indestructibly to London's streets. Well, not quite inde-structibly. I was not able to find Stinking Lane — covered over, P suppose, by the asphalt of progress of the perfume of propri-

According Sencer Nilson, the Los Angeles-based polisler of a credit card industry newsletter $7.64 million was charged to fraud in 184 in the United States (which accounts for line): 80 percent of the estimated 625 milon redit and charge cards issued worldvde). On an average day in the United Statemen than 10,000 cards are lost or stolen insiving 5,000 people. One in five of them is ued faudulently. In Brit-sin, more than £46millon (about $55 million) a year is lost ifraul. Card counterfeit-ing at Visa banks writhide has grown from $740,000 in 1981 t $383 million.

passport and driving license. A thief can rent a car at your expense if he has both charge card and license.

 Memorize your personal identification number for withdrawing cash at the auto-matic dispenser. Guard it as you would your Swiss bank account number. At least, don't write it in an obvious place, and never on the back of your bank card.

· Never put your card number on a postcard or the outside of an envelope; never give it over the phone unless you are making the transaction with an organization that you know and has been properly identified.

Be wary about giving your card number and its expiration date when ordering goods

by mail order. · Hotels and car rental companies often ask to take an imprint of your card when you arrive in order to establish your credit. This is sometimes unavoidable. But try just showing your card. And never, in any circumstances, sign a blank imprint. · Give the impression in a store or restaurant that you're watching your card as you hand it over. Always draw a line through any blank spaces above the total when you sign and make sure the box at the bottom is totaled up. Do not leave the cardholder's copy of the charge slip on the table. Destroy the carbon paper between receipts. Make sure the card returned to you is your own and not someone else's or a dummy.

 Don't rejoice if you don't receive your monthly statement on time. Call to ask the reason for the delay. It may be that someone else has made a fraudulent change of address in order to prevent you from seeing your statement. Check carefully for anomalies and notify the card company promptly. Give plenty of notice if you change an address.

 Keep a list of your card numbers along with phone numbers to call if you need to report a loss. Remember, you can be held ponsible for frandulent use of a card until this has been done. But making a dozen or more calls can be a major hassle, if not impossible, if you are halfway around the world on a business trip. It makes sense to subscribe to one of the credit-card registration services springing up in many countries. For annual dues of around $15 they will record details of all your cards (as well as ers. If you lose them, you simply make a single collect call from anywhere in the world (sometimes a local number) and they will undertake to notify the card companies. They also provide a change of address and emergency cash service (usually up to $300 a claim) as well as helping to expedite the replacement of cards.

Two recommended card registration services are the CPP Card Protection Plan, tel: London 938-1017, and the Credit Card Sentinal (Los Angeles based); tel; London 686-8666.

Ruins of an Ancient American Civilization

by Jim Robbins

THEIR ruins are scattered throughout the brushy, sandstone carryons of the Southwest, built on boulders and cliffs and tucked into crevices, the remains of one of the most advanced civilizations of prehistoric America.

The mysterious people who built these villages are the Anasazis, a Navaho word that means the ancient ones, and their civilization flourished for several hundred years up to the 13th century in the Four Corners region - southern Utah, southwestern Colorado, northwestern New Mexico and northeastern Arizona.

There are tens of thousands of Anasazi sites in the Southwest. The structures are made of sandstone, mortared together with mud, which in some cases contains the fin-gerprints of the Indian builder.

Many of the ruins have fallen victim to vandals, the weather and other elements and have tumbled from their original height to indistinguishable mounds of rubble. But where the Anasazis built on bedrock or in a protected crevice, their structures have re-mained intact. This is expecially true of Mesa Verde National Park in southwestern Colorado, Canyon de Chelly National Mon-ument in Arizona and Chaco Culture National Historical Park in New Mexico.

One of the most intriguing of the Anasazi sites is at Hovenweep National Monument in southwestern Colorado and southeastern Utah, perhaps the most inaccessible component of the national park system in the Lower 48. Hovenweep, known primarily for the many towers constructed there, is actually six groups of ruins totaling 784 acres (316 hectares) scattered over 700 square miles (about 1,800-square kilometers).

The ruins, built from A.D.900 to 1100, are not so dramatic or large as many of the cliff dwellings at Mesa Verde or so well preserved or complex as the dwellings in Chaco. What is unusual is the remoteness, the openness, the stillness and the absence of 20th-century appurlenances to detract from the experience. Hovenweep has retained a primitive atmosphere similar to what must have existed when the region was occupied by the ancient ones.

The reason is simple: The last 16 miles of road to the monument is dirt - muddy in winter and spring, dusty and rugged in summer. There are few services along the way, and none at all at the monument. There is no grocery store, no laundry facilities, no traffic, no snack bar, no gas station, no ropes to keep observers away from the ruins and only a crude visitor center. The monument has a staff of two, including the superintendent.

"The dirt road acts as a filter," says Bob Hart, the park ranger. "I don't have to wear a gun here. People who come here, come here to see the ruins."

Hovenweep is a Ute word that means descried valley, an apt description. The land is as flat and open as a billiard table and in spring when rains bring the sagebush to life as green, too — for as far as the eye can see.

Here, as in most other places, the Anasazis built their villages near a small spring in a canyonhead, the precious oasis of the Southwest. Cottonwood and hackberry trees, a rarity in the desert, grow on the canyon floor, providing shade. The multistory homes and kivas - round ceremonial rooms set in the ground — are scattered the length ings. Several are built on the northern lip of the canyon. There are petroglyphs at various spots and a cluster of small handprints on a rock wall at the Hackberry Canyon Group.

A walk through the stillness of the shallow canyon is a walk through time. Even in early spring the sun is strong and is reflected back harshly from the yellow rocks of the canyon. The creamy aromatic flowers of the cliff roads are just beginning to bloom. A slight, steady breeze blows. Small lizards flit like nervous shadows serous the rocks. Pinon jays call from the pine trees.

Anasazi tower in Hovenweep National Monument.

In Mesa Verde and Canyon de Chelly visitors must be accompanied by a ranger and travel with a group of other visitors — a necessity where attendance and vandalism are high - but visitors at Hovenweep are left to their own devices. The annual visitation is 14,000 while Mesa Verde receives about 600,000 visitors a year.

Hovenweep has several self-guided walk-ing tours, which wind through the structures and in and out of the canyon. The dirt paths packed by the feet of the natives who trod there hundreds of years ago — winds along the ruins on the canyon lip and then dips down, through other mins, boulders and waist-high grasses. On some of the rock walls along the trail the petroglyphs, including a spiral, several birds and what appears to be a serpent, are visible.

Walking through the canyon in the heat, the clumps of cottonwood trees near the spring become welcome, and one gets a feeling of how important these pockets of forgiveness amid a harsh, expansive desert were to the Anasazis.

As a visitor reaches high points in the trail, the canyon opens up in its entirety. Yet the houses and other structures are so much a part of their environment that they are barely discernible.

The square towers in the houses should be entered, crawled through carefully, to be experienced. "The large number of towers are unusual." Hart says. "The evidence suggests they were multiple-use dwellings — for living, storage, astronomy and perhaps for signaling."

The Anasazis were a curious people who are only beginning to be understood. While the Plains Indians were living primitive lives as hunters and gatherers, the Anasazis were building sophisticated homes and tilling the soil. They also built small check dams to catch the fine soil washed away during rainstorms - to be used in farming. And they had apparently incorporated an astronomical calandar into the structure of their homes. During the spring and summer solstice the stmlight shone directly through holes in the wall, indicating appropriate times for ceremonies as well as for planting and harvesting.

But their advanced society, combined with a 25-year drought, may have forced them to abandon the region — sometime in the late 1200s or early 1300s. Archaeological evidence shows that during the beginning of the occupation they are cottonial rabbits and the comparison they are cottonial rabbits and the cottonial rabbits. other forest animals. Toward the end of their stay, in the mid-1200s, they were eating jack rabbits and other plains wildlife, which indicates that the environment had been altered from a forest to a desert econogy. Sometime after the 1300s the Anasazis abandoned most of the Four Corners region and remained only in northeastern Arizona and central New Mexico.

RCHAEOLOGISTS conjecture that A the Anasazis stripped away the forest to plant their crops. When it rained the soil was washed away and when the problems were compounded by the drought, they were unable to continue farming and moved on. The Hopi and Taos Indians are believed to be their present-day descendants.

Because of continuing investigation into ruin sites, new facts about the Anasazis constantly emerge. There is evidence to suggest, for example, that they may have practiced cannibalism. Skulls with the brain removed and human bones, apparently with the marrow chewed out, have been discovered.

In spite of the research, however, Anasazi ruins and the information they contain are disappearing at an alarming rate. Vandalism, for profit or other reasons, is epidemic, and experts estimate that 80 percent of the sites show evidence of vandalism. In addition, on the Dolores River in southwestern Colorado, a new dam is slowly flooding some of the richest sites, and researchers are racing against the rising river to claim the artifacts.

Visitors and energy development may deal Anasazi sites, especially in the Hovenweep area, the most serious blow. Large reservoirs of carbon dioxide, used in oil and gas exploration, and coal have been discovered near Hovenweep. Officials are concerned that blasting and beavy truck traffic may destabilize the perishable ruins. And now there is a proposal to pave the last few miles of dirt road to the monument, which Hart and others say would increase visitation and inevitably alter the nature of Hovenweep.

Inevitely, chaidering the number of languages at the ultural diversity of the country, Indias eperience of their arts is likely the country, Indias eperience of their arts is likely the country and local custom. to be fined b geography and local custom. North Idia, ir example, was deeply influenced been tries of Moslem rule, and this is evidet in he architecture, the painting and eve the ecular aspects of the Kathak school daning. Not until I was grown up and trailed firly extensively in India did I discovethe as with which my south Indian grandprentsvere familiar.

Apar from the classical, religious art, In-dia has strug and vibrant history of folk and trial expression of secular art. Potters, weaver, painers, storytellers, are fixtures in the day liftof a village. India is also the most polification for handicrafts that I know,n thelong slack season between the growing of crops, villagers have developed all kinds of skills, using the local materials. In Mysore, for example, sandalwood is carved into screens, boxes and ornaments; its oil is extracted to make soap. Kashmir shawls and carpets are famous; so are the papier-māchė bowls, lamps, trays, boxes lacquered with local designs. The clays and dyes of Rajasthan are used to produce the characteristic blue-and-white ceramics. Cot-tons and silks from various parts of India are easily identified by regional weaves, colors

no local art or craft. The other regular occasions for Indians to see and demonstrate their arts are provided by the festivals that dapple the Indian calen-dar. Of course, Indians can make a festive affair out of any event even slightly out of the ordinary. An imate sense of pageantry and a delight in display and decoration can turn the most pressic of local elections into an occuse for villagers to decorate their carts with flowers and tinsel, garland their oxen and dress in their finest clothes to go to the polls in magnificent procession.

PERHAPS the most spectacular festival that I have seen in India was the celebration of Dussera in Mysore. Sometime in late September or early October the city of Mysore used to celebrate the 10 days of fighting recorded in the Ramayana and its happy conclusion in the victory of King Rama over the forces of evil. The heart of the festival was the royal palace, where for 10 days the maharajah held durbars for the nobles of his realm. Seated on a jewel-encrusted throne, he received the obeisance of his nobles in an astonishing audience room, open on one side to a courtyard. There he could see the feats of horsemanship, or archers, jugglers and acrobats that were all part of the festivities.

Villagers used to walk a hundred miles to be in Mysore for the Dussera celebration and the exhibition that brought to the capital all the best dancers, musicians, sculptors, painters, puppeteers and storytellers of the district. Even though the Princes, in an indepen-deut and democratic India, can no longer afford such lavish celebrations, the idea that a display of local artistic skills is appropriate —indeed necessary —for any festival, con-tinues. In Bombay, singing and dancing accompany the processions carrying images of the fat and protective little elephant-beaded god, Ganesha, down to the beach. There they immerse him in the ocean, imploring his intercession in the proper functioning of the mousoon. In Banaras, the whole Ramayana must be beautifully recited and its story acted out annually.

Whether in the city or the village, India's arts are so entwined in the fabric of daily living that one can scarcely separate the strands. The complex texture of art and religion, of craft and utilitarianism, of personal contact and performance, provides for most Indians, in the midst of a poor living, a

Artificial Turf: The Grass Gets Greener for Athletes

By ERIC N. BERG New York Times Service

EW YORK - With the National Football League season beginning on Sunday, team owners, trainers and fans will again prize player health as critical for success. And whether players avoid injury depends in part on artificial turf, which has undergone many technological improvements to make it safer.

improvements to make it safer.

Attlicial turf has surged in popularity in recent years and has become a $50-million industry worldwide, with a market divided among six main companies. Since Monsanto Corp. supplied the first inajor installation of its Astroturf synthetic grass at the similes Houston Astrodome in 1975, about 550 high schools, colleges and municipalities in the Juited States have installed artificial turf, for foot-mail hasehall or tennis.

its sales of artificial turf these days are outside the United States. Unlike grass, artificial turf does not have to be seeded, watered cor fertized. It generally cannot be uprooted by players' cleats or squashed by marching bands. And it does not have the craters or bumps that are the bane of groundskeepers. Proponents of artificial turn say that makes their products far less costly and time consuming to maintain than grass,

Burmany experts say that artificial turf is a leading cause of playe injury. Some say man-made surfaces increase the speed of the cintestants, and that leads to more sprains.

"You start and stop so fast," said Robert L. Davis, director of grounds at the 92,000-seat Neyland Stadium at the University of Designers of artificial turf have been working to produce what tley say are safer surfaces. Of the two pioneers in the field, Konsanto and Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing Co., only Aonsanto remains. But several smaller companies have entered tle fray, and have produced three-layer "systems" in which a tick pad is placed over asphalt or gravel, then a two-part carpet, consisting of the "grass" attached to a plastic sheet called a pile, is atached to the underlying pad. The total thickness is 2 inches lany first-generation surfaces became hard when oxygen "cils" inside their underlying pads collapsed from players' recated pounding. A company called All-Pro Athletic Surfaces In. of Oklahoma City, however, has come up with a man-made pd for its All-Pro Turf that it says does not require oxygen to say soft. In Buffalo, New York, Sporter International Inc. has egim marketing a 100-percent rubber pad for its Omniture grificial surface that it says is naturally bouncy.

Equally important, many companies have begun using poly-ropylene instead of nylon to make artificial grass itself. Polypro-ylene is believed by materials experts to be more flexible and hurable — although Monsanto says its latest version of Astroturf

U.S. Auto Sales Up Sharply

71%-Gain Laid To Incentives

DETROIT - The cut-rate financing war among U.S. domestic automakers pushed car sales in late August to 71 percent above the rate for a year ago, shattering all re-cords for the period, according to company reports Thursday.

The Big Three reported spectacular gains over last year's Aug. 21-31 performance, with Ford Motor Co.'s sales up 79.6 percent, General Motors Corp.'s up 73.6 percent and Chrysler Corp.'s up 76.1 percent.

"They're a boomer," said Gary Glaser, an automotive industry analyst with First Boston Corp. in New York. "I don't think anybody was predicting this. It's amazing.

The performance pushed sales for August 23.4 percent ahead of a Ford matched that interest rate and threw in rebates. Chrysler fought back with rebates and a 7.5percent interest rate.

The domestic car makers said they sold 405,080 cars in the Aug. 21-31 selling period, up 71 percent from 237,078 a year ago.

There were 10 official selling days in the period, putting sales per day at 40,080, shattering the old record for the Aug. 21-31 period of 31,811 sales a day in 1978. The record for any 10-day period was 53,959 set in the third reporting period of September 1972.

Among the small-car producers, American Honda Motor Co. Inc. sales were up 1.1 percent for the final period and down 18.3 percent for the month. American Motors Corp. sales were down 18 percent for late August and 34.6 percent for the month, and Volkswagen of America Inc. sales were up 5.7 percent in the final period and 2.5 percent for the month.

In Vancouver, Traders Still Recall Black Friday

By Douglas Martin New York Times Service

VANCOUVER, British Columbia - Last Oct. 19 is still remembered as Black Friday on the Vancouver Stock Exchange, which is Canada's penny stock market. The bottom fell out of the market, investors suffered the equivalent of more than $30 million in losses and the exchange's already shaky reputation teetered a bit more.

Black Friday was caused by investors, using highly leveraged margin accounts, who bid the price of Beanford Resources Ltd. and five related stocks far beyond their true value. When a rumor swept through the exchange that major investors were bailing out, Beauford, an oil-exploration company, dropped the equivalent of from $8.33 to 74 cents (6.09 Canadian dollars to 54 cents at current rates) in one trading session.

That, along with a plunge in prices of minerals and other resources, sent the value of shares traded on the exchange down 44 percent in 1984. Although the exchange has shown substantial improvement this year, it has still lagged behind the other three Canadian exchanges - in Toronto. Montreal and Alberta.

Now, regulators, member brokers and exchange officials are sifting through the wreckage, trying to put their tattered house in order.

Two stock promoters will be put on trial for theft and fraud this month. A federal investigation into market manipulation is proceeding. Provincial penalties for violations of securities laws are being increased from a maximum of six months in prison and a $2,000 fine to live years and

Moreover, the exchange has tightened computer monitoring procedures, requirements for new listings and rules for disclosing trading

"We've been trying to improve things in every way, shape or form," Donald J. Hudson, president of the exchange, said. But he and others acknowledged that it was not always easy, in a market geared to promoting speculation on new, undercapitalized companies

Farm-Lending Agency Calls U.S. Aid Crucial

WASHINGTON — The Farm credit System, the largest farm leader in the United States, is facing its most severe crisis since the Depression and could be forced to begin liquidation within two years unless the federal government comes to the rescue, the system's comes to the rescue, the system's top regulatory official said Thursday.

ministration ways in which the govcrument can help the system survive a severe crunch expected to hit within 18 to 24 months.

"If we are unsuccessful ... we will begin to face the necessity of possible liquidation of portions of the Farm Credit System including some of its regional banks, Mr. Wilkinson said. This, I think, would be a very unfortunate situa-tion to permit to happen."

Britain Will Sell Last C&W Stake

LONDON — The British government said Thursday that, as expected, it planned to sell its remaining 23-percent interest in Cable & Wireless PLC during the current financial year, which ends next March 31.

The chancellor of the exchequer, Nigel Lawson, said the sale, which would be subject to stock market conditions, was part of the government's con-tinuing program of privatiza-tion and was in line with its policy of selling government minority holdings in private companies. Government sources said last month that the delay in privatization of British Airways had increased the like-lihood that the government would soon sell shares in C&W.

Merchant bankers and stock brokers were invited to offer their services in the sale of the stake, which amounts to 102.5 million ordinary shares, Mr. Lawson said. The sale would follow two previous public of-ferings of C&W shares. C&W shares were trading at 555 pence ($7.50) late Thursday on the London Stock Exchange, down from 565 pence Wednesday.

Donald E. Wilkinson, governor of the Farm Credit Administration, the potential cost to taxpayers at $5 the potential cost to taxpayers at $5 billion to $20 billion.

The Farm Credit System, found ed early this century to make easier S74-billion system.

Mr. Wilkinson said at a news conference he will begin exploring with Congress and the Reagan adoff the last federal seed money in the 1960s, the system has used no government funds.

> The loose confederation of regional banks and their local branches is regulated by the Farm Credit Administration, an independent federal regulatory body.

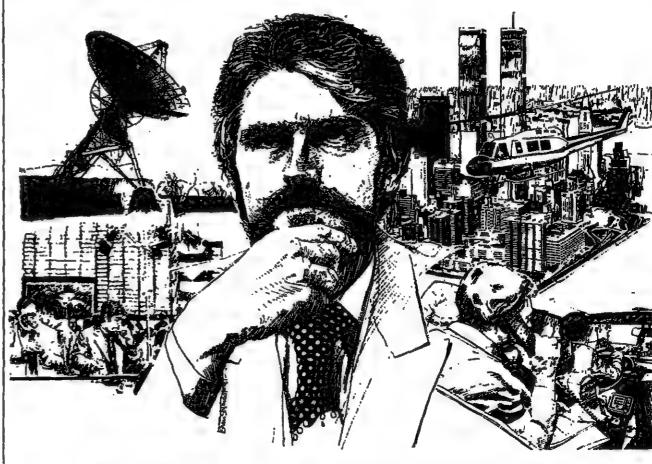

While it is exploring possible av enues for federal aid, Mr. Wilkinson said, the system will operate under an emergency rule that en-ables money to be shifted between various banks in the system to meet operating losses that have been concentrated in areas hardest bit by a farm depression.

Bonds sold to provide farm loan money are backed by the entire system. Although it has in place a loss-sharing arrangement, that process has been too cumbersome to help in many cases, he said. Eleven production credit associations, the local conduits for short-term oper-ating loans, have been forced into liquidation over the past two years. The system's board of directors approved the expedited loss-shar-ing procedure on Wednesday. It will, in effect, override the objections local farm credit banks may have to shifting system funds and is likely to anger some local credit officials who have guarded their administrative powers and object to centralizing the system. But Mr. Wilkinson said the move was necessary to allow quick re-sponse to problems and to demonstrate that the system is doing everything it can internally before going to the lederal government for help.

Among possible long-term reme-dies for the system's ills are in-creased regulatory authority for the Farm Credit Administration, gov-ernment guarantees for Farm Credit bonds and loans, creation of an institution to take over bad farm debt, a direct infusion of federal cash and a so-called buydown of interest rates, Mr. Wilkinson said.

Hutton to Punish 15 for Overdrafts

WASHINGTON — An internal investigation of excessive bank overdrafting by executives of E.F. Hutton & Co., published Thurs-day, exonerated the company's chairman and its former president but recommended 15 other executives be punished.

The investigation headed by Griffin B. Bell, a former U.S. attorney general, directed the harshest recommendations against six branch managers in whose regions overdrafting of bank accounts was so excessive and egregious as to warrant sanctions.

These measures included person-3 fines ranging from $25,000 to $50,000, but Mr. Bell, at a news conference, said the six would not have to pay if they resigned.

He said, "We tried to link the high officials at Hutton with the wrongdoing that the Justice Department found. We were never able to do that."

In May, Hutton pleaded guilty to 2,000 counts of mail and wire fraud involving overdrafts between July 1980 and February 1982 at many of the 400 banks where it had accounts. The federal government did not however, prosecute any Hutton officials.

Carbide Rules Out Takeover Through Stock 'Greenmail'

New York Times Service NEW YORK - Union Carbide Corp., the subject of hostile take-over rumors, has ruled out any form of "greenmail," including attempts by a large stockholder to exchange shares for one or more of Carbide's best businesses

"We don't want to get into negotiations with one individual — the holder of a large block of shares that would be detrimental to other shareholders," Warren M. Ander-Union Carbide's chairman, said Wednesday.

Union Carbide, as part of a corporate restructuring announced last week, plans to invest $220 million for improved safety at its plants and to sharply reduce the number of employees at its head-quarters in Danbury, Connecticut.

Although Carbide called a meeting Wednesday to discuss its restructuring, many of the questions centered on the takeover speculation, which has been mounting on Wall Street since GAF Corp. disclosed last week that it had acquired 9.9 percent of Carbide's

Mr. Anderson said Carbide was not seeking a more friendly bidder for its shares, or a "white knight" in case GAF attempted a takeover.

He said there had not been any discussions with GAF concerning a merger or the sale of assets.

Japanese Chip Makers Join Victims of Slump might have been too optimistic and moderation in their overall strategy By Donald Woutar that its reduction might be closer to at all," said Thomas D. Hinkelman,

Los Angeles Times Service LOS ANGELES — The worldwide slump in the semiconductor industry is beginning to take its toll on Japanese manufacturers, who have been forced to cut back on capital spending for the first time since they entered the chip business in the early 1970s. Despite their recent market success against U.S. companies, the Japanese semiconductor makers will slash spending on chip-related property, plants and equipment by 23 percent this year, down to $2.7 billion, according to Dataquest, a market research firm in San Jose, fringes, so to speak," said Rupert Bullock, British Columbia's top enforcer of securities law.

Recent history would seem to prove his point. In 1984, a stock promoter, Dennis Johnstone, was convicted of bribing an exchange official, Chris Caulton, In 1983, Gunter Allman was sentenced to 15 months for manipulating a stock called Grand Prix Resources Ltd.

An example of the market's problems came when Willroy Mines Ltd. filed a $15.5-million ish Columbia last year against New Cinch Uranium Ltd. and the exchange, alleging that the exchange was negligent in not insuring that all available New Cinch assay results were made public. But the suit was settled earlier this summer, with the exchange paying $275,000

But memories of Black Friday still seem to be inhibiting investors. Although the number of shares traded on a normal day this year has risen to 10 million, from 6 milmillion traded on Jan. 17, 1983, which is the record.

What led to Black Friday, in essence, was the bidding up of the price of Beauford to what later seemed absurdly high levels, investigators and brokers said. How high was apparent in a press release issued by the company on Aug. 9, valuing Beauford's oilfields at about $12.50 a share.

But in the 11 months preceding Black Friday the price of Beauford rose steadily to $8.33 a share, from $1.85. It and five related resource companies were being propelled by continuing purchases from a small group of investors led by Robert Ross Dion, who promotes new companies that want to go public. He and the others served as officers for Beauford and on interlocking

The sand cushions the impact of players' pounding feet and is said to hold ersatz blades upright long after regular grass would have been flattened. Supporters say the surface is more likely to bend under pressure from a player's foot.

BONN - The West German government, trade unions and employers met Thursday for their first round-table talks in eight years but wide differences emerged over how best to tackle stagnating unem-

Mr. Kohl's coalition has introduced limited measures to stimulate employment, but has repeatedly rejected demands from the labor federation and opposition Social Democrats for big governmentbacked job-creation programs.

Mr. Breit said he agreed with government estimates that the number of people in work was likely to rise by 100,000 this year.

"But the catastrophic prospect has not changed that we are in danger of sliding into the next economic turndown with more than 2 million out of work." he added.

Unemployment, one of the big-gest political problems facing Mr. Kohl ahead of national elections in 1987, stood at 2.22 million last month, equivalent to 8.9 percent of the work force and the highest August figure on record.

Mr. Breit said the union held to its view that, along with economic growth, cutting working hours and strengthening the public's spending power were the most promising ways to solve the jobs crisis.

THE HANDYMAN

By Penelope Mortimer. 208 pages. $13.95. Joan Kahn Books/St. Martin's Press Inc., 175 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y. 10010.

PENELOPE MORTIMER, a British con-temporary of Doris Lessing in age and of Margaret Drabble in subject, is not widely known in the United States, despite the success of her fine novel "The Pumpkin Eater" (made into a film starring Anne Bancroft). This is a pity, for her novels—this is her ninth—detail with sympathy and irony women whose lives are shaped by marriage, motherhood, domes-ticity. She has been virtually the only chronicler of typical women's experiences over the last four decades.

Her novels of the 1950s and '60s trace the dilemnas of the emotionally dependent women of her generation, caught between the satis-faction and the suffocation of domestic life. In these books she presciently explored the de-structive consequences of "housewife's dis-ease" long before Betty Friedan diagnosed the condition. Mortimer's more recent novels survey the fallout of the "feminine mystique" as her female characters move into middle age: Children grow up and depart, parents die, sponses leave them (for younger women) or die. These women's struggles to achieve control of their lives are poignant object lessons in the necessities of female emotional and economic

That challenge is the starting point of "The Handyman." Gerald Musprait's death is reported on the first page, and Phyllis, his wife of 45 years, gradually discovers the traps hidden beneath the tranquil surface of her life. First, her status changes: Once part of a pair, as a widow she is the "extra" who is either patronized or ignored. She begins to feel increasingly superfluous leaning on her two grown children as she reorients herself to life as a solitary woman. Eventually she tries to precipitate a positive change by moving to a rundown house in an apparently tranquil but actually mori-bund English country village named Cryck.

There Phyllis Musprant meets the people who fatefully reshape not only her sense of herself but her life. Her nearest neighbor, the colorful and eccentric Rebecca Broune, pro-

Rebecca's stalwart independence inspires Phyllis, who determines to shore up her ramshackle house (and life) by engaging the handyman Rebecca recommends. At this point the novel moves into high geat.

Distracting the reader, as Phyllis Muspratt Sedistracted, from seeing where events inevitable will lead, Mortimer skillfully propels her story forward with maximum tension. Because of the handyman's manipulative charm and her emost ional susceptibility, Phyllis is totally unpresent on the work of the what Fred really is: a man as efficient at emotional blackmail as he is at home repairs the bill he is reluctant to proffer might be resident. The bill he is reluctant to proffer might be pair in sexual favors, he suggests, rather than cast. Other characters fill out the story of Phyllises gradual slippage into disillusionment and disaster. Her son and daughter, each preoccu-pied with the disarray of his or her own affairs; are hardly aware of Phyllis's struggle to take charge of her life. As in others of Mortimer's novels, the mother remains the emotional pavot for her children, who, even as adults, are incompable of seeing her as a person with needs of her own. Mortimer defily develops the subsidiary plot, as Phyllis's bachelor son "grows up" and her married daughter confronts her stray-

Mortimer shows us how small errors — of perception, of action, of neglect - may produce disproportionate consequences. Catching the reader by surprise, she weaves the casual. details of everyday life into a fine story of suspense and emotional crisis.

This time, her buzzing Graf to No. 11 in the women's termis world has forebands and backhands had Shriver lunging gone almost unnoticed. Like countryman and flailing Becker, Graf is precocious, physically and men-tally, and outgoing. She gestures and talks to herself throughout a match.

And, like Becker, she has great staying power, something she put on display Wednesday, rallying after losing a second-set tie breaker and after falling behind, 4-1, in the last set.

"At 4-1 down, I thought it would be very tough for me to win," Graf said. "But I think Pam got a little tired and I just kept going for shots and trying to win."

When Shriver finally pushed a low, reaching backhand just deep in the last of the three tie breakers, Graf let out a shout. Shriver slowly gathered her weary body, graciously put her arm around her opponent and sat in her chair, a towel over her head, weeping.

"My effort couldn't have been any more than "My effort couldn't nave been any more than it was," she said later. "I just think it was one of the most unbelievable matches that I've been a part of. "When I was warming up this morning, my backhand was not too good," Graf said. "But in the match, I was surprised because I was hitting so many good shots. My father told me before the match to slice my backhand, and it worked very well for me." From the beginning, it was apparent that Graf, who lost a three-set match to Shriver at Wimbledon, was primed for an upset. She broke Shriver in the first game, winning it with the first of many sliced backhands.

Shriver got that break back, charging the net at every opportunity and daring Graf to pass her. Often, Graf did. But Shriver, using her height of 6 feet (1.8 meters) and reach, gobbled up any ball that was not perfectly hit and kept the match taut throughout

"Some of the points out there were violent for me, the way she was hitting the ball," said Shriver, who afterward had trouble sitting bebeing grass, so she didn't get as much

"It would have been easy for me to lose heart after that set because it was hot and the set was so tough," Shriver said. "But if I had lost concentration, I would have been down, 41, in a hurry."

Instead, she broke Graf for 2-1 in the second set, only to be broken back when serving for the set at 5-4. So, again they went to a tie breaker. This time, it was Shriver who made the big shots, coming from 3-1 down to a 6-3 lead. At 6-4, she twisted a serve that Graf reached for and netted and it was one set each.

"I had to tell myself it was a start again, not the end," Graf said. "But she was volleying very Shriver quickly volleyed her way to a break at 3-1, causing Graf to slam a ball in frustration while she muttered obscenities in German, according to German-speaking observers.

Graf may have been frustrated, but she was not finished. She survived a deuce game on her serve in the next game and broke back back with a powerful forehand.

defending champion Denver Broncos: Will that elusive "future" arrive this season?

Franco from Pittsburgh, Houston's Earl and Burn or Cincinnati's cool, calm Anderson, Ross and Collinsworth. How else can you explain that the Pitisburgh Steelers won the division last year with a pedestrian 9-7 record and almost allowed a team that started 0-5, the Cincinnati

Bengals, to steal their title in the season's final week? Credit the Steelers' Chuck Noll for coaching astutely, and linebacker Mike Merriweather (15 sacks) for blitzing effectively, and wide receiver-kick returner Louis Lipps (45 catches) for being a gem of a rookie. And credit the team for getting within one victory of the Super Bowl. But do not forget that the Steelers lost a three-game lead and nearly allowed the Bengals a remarkable reversal, or that the aggregate 1984 regular-season record in the AFC Central was 25-19 (.391), worst in the NFL

How might the Steelers be knocked off in 1985? Perhaps those same Cinciunati Bengals (8-8) have the best chance, if quarterback Ken Anderson, 36, can stay healthy; if their top draft pick, wide receiver Eddie Brown, from the University of Miami, can ease the double coverage on Cris Collinsworth, and if the defense can return to 1981-82

Or maybe this is the year for the Cleveland Browns (5-11). Marty Schottenheimer begins his first full season as coach needing help on offense and a repeat by the AFC's top-rated defense, which allowed but 290 yards a game. If rookie quarterback Bernie Kosar gets his chance, maybe the Browns will get their chance, too. If the running backs run, the offensive line blocks, the quarterbacks throw and if tight end Ozzie Newsome - a league-high 402 catches over six seasons — provides his standard excellence, the Browns cannot help but improve.

Royals 6, White Sox 5: In Kan- expected to be Lonnie Smith of the Giants 4, Phillies 3: Rob Deer hit land with one out in the top of the sas City, Missouri, left fielder Luis Royals, Keith Hernandez of the a three-run homer with one out in ninth, but after Jesse Barfield Salazar misjudged Pat Sheridan's Mets and Lee Lacy of the Orioles. The division's most expensive backfield belongs to the Houston Oilers, who finished 3-13 and last in 1984. The quarterback is Warren Moon (12 touchdown passes, 14 interceptions) and the running back is Mike Rozier, who rushed for 1,300 yards in the USFL this spring.

Defensively, the Oilers need help, desperately, from their three top draft picks: defensive ends Ray Childress from the University of Houston and Richard Byrd of Southern Mississippi, and cornerback Richard Johnson of Wisconsin. Houston rated last in the league in stopping the run in 1984, allowing 174 yards per game.

Their offense was so excellent last season that the Misma Dotphins (14-2) won this division by five games. It would seem that even a sizable slippage will not keep them from repeating as champions.

While it is true that quarterback Dan Marino and big-play receivers Mark Clayton and Mark Duper likely will not duplicate their record-making numbers, it is equally unlikely that the offense will be stopped, as it was by the San Francisco 49ers in that 38-16 Super Bowl searing. The New England Patriots (9-7) appear to have the most realistic chance of overtaking the Dolphins. It would help if they could win in Miami, where they have succeeded just once in 17 games. It also would help if running back Tony Collins, who gained 550 yards in 1984, can return to the 1,049-yard breakaway threat he was in 1984. Quarterback Tohy Eason (23 touchdowns, eight inter-ceptions) cannot get sacked 59 times, and the defense must produce more than 25 takeaways while finding another cornerback at least half as good as Ray Clayborn.

Now that Joe Walton of the New York Jets has fired his coaching staff and given his team the 3-4 defense, albeit the last in the AFC to get it, can the Jets play as good as they look on paper?

They have a high-quality running back in Freeman McNeil (1,070 yards), a tough, talented tight end in Mickey Shuler (68 catches) and a seemingly unbreakable receiver in top pick Al Toon, from Wisconsin. Now they must get one of those quarterbacks — Ken O'Brien (1-4 last season as a starter) or Pat Ryan (6-5 as starter) - to produce something more than mediocrity. Mark Gastinean, the NFL sack leader with 22 last season, will do his part although a broken thumb will prevent him from playing in the season-opener, and rookie safety Lester Lyles, from Virginia, should help a secondary that seems to spend as much injured as playing. The Buffalo Bills (2-14) had what appears to be a breakthrough draft, landing defensive tackle Bruce Smith from Virginia Tech, cornerback Derrick Burroughs of Memphis State, all-America center Mark Traynowicz of Nebraska, wide receiver Chris Burkett of Jackson State and quarterback Frank Reich of Maryland.

Coach Kay Stephenson also traded 12-year veteran quarterback Joe Ferguson and acquired quarterback Vince Ferragamo from the Los Angeles Rams. The Bills will improve, but bardly enough.

And what about the ladianapolis Colts (4-12)? Rookie coach Rod Dowhower, who helped Neil Lomax develop as a quarterback at St. Louis, starts from scratch with an offense that finished last in yards, passing and points.

Progress Gone Awry

WE stand at the outermost lice squads and ingenious barri-frontier. Human enlighten- cades at transportation centers and ment is far advanced. We can now say "chairperson" without feeling absurd. Technological progress is miraculous. We have the digital wristwatch.

Yet things are breaking down. Three weeks after I bought a roll of 22-cent stamps from the postal authorities, the stickum had dampened sufficiently to glue the entire roll tightly together. Stamps ripped apart in my hands when I struggled to salvage enough of one to pass the Postal Service's rigorous inspection. In a temper, I hurled them out

The spleador of our science tells us everything about breakdown. Old folks had to get by with only appendicitis, shingles and boils, but we have a stunning array of medical terrors. We have stress. We have Type A behavior. We have stroke induced by insertion of artificial hearts.

Yet things are breaking down.

We have psychiatrists, and politicians to give comfort or warning. We have pills to distract one's mind from the breakdown. The young can be placed in front of miraculous boxes producing incredibly fast-changing pictures, which leave their minds too incapable of sus-tained thought to realize that things are breaking down. Persons unwilling to risk chemical or electronic help can be persuaded to think happier thoughts if cautioned that it is unpatriotic to notice that things are breaking down.

Yet things are breaking down. Two months after ordering a washing machine for a vacation house he had bought, my friend Bob came by to weep. He had been to the huge national mail-order retail-house outlet that had taken his order. Why hadn't the machine been delivered? The human robot manning the inquiry booth checked his electronic miracle box and said, "Because you never ordered one." Bob said the miracle box was an imbecile. The robot said, "You can reorder with me now if you want, or buy one somepiace else."

Things are breaking down, Yet the machinery of efficiency has never been more complete. Popublic buildings, combined with seat belts and ingeniously designed highways, insure an all-time standard of safety. We have the most advanced weapons ever built. We

Yet things are breaking down. A relative of mine, ticketed by highway police for driving 10 miles an hour over the speed limit, recently had her insurance canceled, though she had 14 years of driving experience without ever being previously ticketed for a moving violation. The police miracle box had reported her ticket to the insurance industry, which had not been turning a profit in her part of the country. Because she shared ownership of the car with her husband, for good measure the company can-

He phoned me long distance, wanting me to tell him, "Things are breaking down, boy, and the best thing for you to do is set your brain down in front of that miracle box with the fast-changing pictures or else take a pill."

He could not reach me. I had thrown the telephone wire out the window in a fury at a mechanical voice that had been constantly telling me to dial my miracle callingcard number again because the miracle number I had just dialed was "not valid."

It had got so that I had to dial the "not valid" number three or four times before the mechanical voice would say "thank you" and let the call go through.

So, I told the voice, "Things are breaking down," and threw the phone wire out the window.

That was childish, because we stand at the outermost frontier where human enlightenment, far advanced, permits us to say "chairperson" without feeling absurd. We have the digital wristwatch, we have stress - not just boils and shingles - and we have the artificial heart that can induce strokes. We have the car burglar alarm, the human robot, the miracle box. We have couriers threatening to be stayed from the swift completion of their appointed rounds by snow. Yet things are breaking down.

Violence by Fans: The Sport May Be to Blame

By Daniel Goleman New York Times Service

R ESEARCH prompted by increased violence among sports fans in recent years is challenging long-held notions about been used for years by Olympics the link between some highly competitive games of aggression and the observers they enthrall.

Many psychologists and sociologists now conclude that the violence that often occurs in physical-contact sports has a tendency to spur aggression off the field. There is a direct psychological connection between violence on stands," said Michael Smith of York University in Toronto, one new work on sports violence, of many researchers who are studying sports violence.

That view is vigorously denied by sports figures, who contend that what they see as sporadic violence among fans is but a reflection of an increasingly violent society.

Psychologists, though, argue that there are factors in sports that make violence more likely, over and above the unruliness to which crowds of any sort are

They agree that sports contests are peaceful events for most people and that watching them contributes to fans' enjoyment of life and sense of well-being. And they acknowledge that violence in the stands or on the streets after the game is restricted for the most part to a youthful minority.

The emerging view is that the particularly brutal and angry aggression that is a virtually integral part of some forms of competitive thletics increases the likelihood of imitative violence.

One theory holds, for example, that anonymity and excitement allow fans to put aside more readily the inhibitions that would keep them from being openly ag-gressive in other situations. Violence on the playing field then holds out to them an example they are more likely to follow. Drinking adds to that likelihood.

This theory runs counter to the view proposed by Freud and others that aggressive competitive sports are a means to contain human aggression, for both those who participate and those who watch. The notion was that harsh physical contact on the field tends to let off steam, to relieve frustrations, to defuse aggressiveness. On a grander scale, international games would serve as a substitute for warfare. That argument has Yet psychologists who have done experiments to test the notion that aggressiveness is relieved physical-contact sports now by say that it does not seem to hold up. To the contrary, combative sports, such as American football, serve to teach and stimulate violence," said Jeffrey Goldstein, a the field and violence in the psychologist at Temple University who is at the forefront of the

that leads to an increase in hostility," he said, "but, apparently, the aggressive nature of the competi-Psychologists are unable to pinpoint exactly which fans are most likely to become violent. The most extensive survey of elence among American spectators is being conducted by Jerry M. Lewis, a sociologist at Kent State University in Ohio. He is studying more than 300 incidents of violence, in which 10 or more people were involved, from 1962

Baseball was the sport with the most such incidents. Though it may have less built-in body contact than some other sports, it nevertheless has its inevitable moments — those accompanying bean balls, broken-up double plays or what might politely be called disagreements with the umpires, for example. It is closely followed by football, basketball, ice hockey and boxing.

Lewis's study is based on accounts of fan violence from six regional newspapers and The New York Times. "The data shows that American sports fans are as prone to violence as any others." Lewis said, "though we've had nothing as serious as in England."

There seem to be strong differences from culture to culture in what triggers sports violence and what form it takes. In Latin America, the most frequent violent incidents follow a pattern in which infuriated fans storm the field to attack a referee who has made an unpopular decision. The violence at British football matches, in the view of experts, represents a case perhaps unparlieled anywhere in the world. The soccer match seems to offer a stage for the most rowdy among British fans to enact the ritualized aggression known as "aggro," short for aggravation, a word the British broadly apply to angry confrontations Those who participate in aggro at soccer matches, studies have found, are usually 17 to 24 years old. They are recognizable by a distinctive way of dressing and the custom of wearing a scarf of the favored team tied around a

Fights among these fans, who sometimes wear reinforced boots that can be used as weapons, seem to account for the vast majority of violence at the matches. But one thing peculiar about them is that their actions are ultimately more intent on bluff and macho posturing than any actual violence. Ag-gro groups spend much of the game shouting obscene or threat-

They are blamed for the 38 deaths and 200 injuries at last spring's soccer match in Belgium between the British and the Italians. But it is believed that the British fans were simply trying to bluff the Italians away from what the British regarded as their portion of the stands. The resulting collapse of a stadium wall and the injuries and deaths were regarded by those who reviewed the confrontation as unexpected and accidental.

No competitive sport seems immune from the problem of fan violence. For example, Leon Mann, a social psychologist in Australia, said that, in his country, cricket had "become the place for rowdy fans, though not the deliberate violence that marks the British soccer riots."

Violence in the stands takes place in an atmosphere that places a high value on aggression, especially the illegal sort, behavioral scientists say. Television coverage, some psychologists argue, may inadvertently magnify the effect of violence by players and, by extension, the fans. Dolf Zillman and Jennings Bryant, psychologists at Indiana Univer-sity, studied how violent incidents during play, such as exceptional roughness and brutal fouls, were treated in telecasts of football and tionally rough or violent play did not result in outright injury, announcers often made such charged comments as: "Now that's the way to make a halfback think twice before hitting the hole again."

Moreover, the camera lingered longer on players who had made vicious tackles than on those who had made otherwise spectacular, nonscoring plays with no unusual roughness. The researchers also found twice as many instant replays of exceptionally rough plays than of those judged to be mild.

Some experts see in today's fan violence a modern version of aggression that, except in rare periods, has always been a part of

The notion of fair play on the field and good behavior in the stands is a historical anomoly, says Dr. Allen Guttmann of Amherst College, who has been studying sports spectators. He cites the classic example of fair play as occurring in the 1936 Olympics when the German Luz Long leading in the long jump, told Jesse Owens what he was doing wrong, and Owens went on Guttmann, who believes this is in contrast with the attitude today, said the German believed it was not a real victory unless his opponent was allowed to do his best. That stance, in Guttmann's view, was largely a product of European and Edwardian upperclass ideals. Until modern times, he said, there was hardly a trace through-out-history of that concept of fair play. In ancient Rome, for example, "almost everyone was a fan of either the Blues or the Greens, the two main teams of charioteers." Guttmann said. Fans of the two sides often fought. The worst such riot may have been the one in A.D. 532 when fans of Blues and Greens joined forces and demanded that several unpopular officials step down. After several days of rioting, the crowd tried to declare a new emperor, but troops arrived to put

The Soviet Union has reversed itself and granted a visa to Bernard Levinson, president of the Associa-tion of Jewish Book Publishers, to attend the Moscow International: Book Fair. No similar action was taken for two other Americans refused visas: Robert Bernstein, president of Random House, and Jer-Laber of the Association of American Publishers; both are executives of the Helsinki Watch Committee; a human rights group. Levinson had left his home in Philadelphia to drive to New York to turn over his fair materials to another delegate: his wife, Judith, notified about the change in the Soviet decision, de cided to have him flagged down on the highway. A laughing state po-lice trooper responded. So the message is: Call Moscow?"

Prime Minister Laurent Fabins of France gave the Legion of Heitor medal Thursday to Patrick Bandry and the other astronauts of the June mission of the U.S. space shuttle. The French astronaut's companions aboard the Discovery — Dan Brandenstein, John C. Creighton, John Fabian, Shinnon Lucid and Prince Sultan Salman Abdel Aziz al-Saud of Saudi Arabia

- are touring French aerospace installations and satellite factories.

An Oct. 15 concert in Stockholi by the British pop singer Chill Rickle and has been canceled because his name appears on a United Nations list of singers who had performed in South Africa or its so-called independent black homelands.
